THE WORLD VIEW FROM OUR SAGE GLOBAL TRAVELERS

THE WEATHER TRAVELER Rose Cohen

HURRICANE NOSTALGIA

It wasn't that long ago that there were no categories of hurricanes, just regular, garden-variety hurricanes: winds of 35 mph were gales, and when the wind clocked at 75 mph, the hurricane flags were hoisted, beaches were closed and people tied down their sailboats, garbage cans, and moved potted plants indoors. A 35-mph gale will push you around; a 75-mph wind will knock over most adults. Even so, the arrival of a hurricane was.... exciting. We would walk down to beach, watch the pounding surf, see the ocean turn brown and ugly with churned-up sand.

PAM NAGAMI, M.D.

“SCIENCE ISN’T EVERYTHING”

Friday, October 21
10-11 A.M. with Q&A
VIA ZOOM

“Science is Important, but It Isn’t Everything” deals with my relationship over many months with a 14-year-old girl paralyzed by a fungal infection, which no leukemic child like her had ever survived. I was making progress with the experimental medication I was instilling into her brain, but because of intense pain and fever, she seemed to be losing the will to go on. So like a reverse Scheherazade, I spun out a long story to keep my patient alive. It was about a lonely dragon and some gallant mice and it always ended with a cliff hanger so that, to hear the next installment, she had to stay alive one more day, and another, and another.

Dr. Nagami, a Yale University of Medicine graduate, was a practicing physician in internal medicine and infectious diseases with the Southern California Permanente Medical Group and a Clinical Associate Professor of Medicine at UCLA. She has made appearances on CNN and NPR

Bless.ed One is the story of Madalisto Muthiyua's amazing life from the streets of a town in Zambia to the beautiful greens of the US Open in New York.

Armed with only a glistening driver, inexplicable talent and loving tutelage from this father he redefined an entire sport. His warm smile and casual demeanor cloaked a hardened determination that came from a life in Zambia surrounded by disease and extreme poverty and enduring the awkward stares that make him an outsider.
